It's QIX. If you like Qix, you will like this game.. So cool, i couldn't stop playing until i beat it!. Much like the Qix arcade game of the 80's and just as fun and addictive. Superb little indie game that should'nt be passed up. Great soundtrack too.. You can be fast enough to completely beat the game 100%/VAll Achievements and get your money back. That's short..

Old concept with new graphic, It could be such a good, diverse and fun game but there are several features missing like a map editor, online modes, highscores or customization. It's not bad it's just too short, because after you've completed the achievement, there's nothing else to do

Would recommend but for the money you can get better games. Possibly the best Qix clone out there. Actually, I'd never heard of any Qix clones, 'til Lightfish, which is kind of surprising when you consider how long Qix has existed...

Good graphics (if you like jellyfish-like critters, anyways), good music, seems to be mostly fair as far as the bounces go.

If, like me, you're old enough to remember and liked the original back when it was in arcades, this should scratch an itch you probably didn't realize you had.. QIX with marine life. Never spent much time with QIX back in the day but I liked this. Simple yet vibrant and well animated. Challenging but not overwhelming.. I really liked this game, re-played it from time to time for years. Wanted to show it to a friend recently... discovered it no longer runs on modern Mac OS.. doing this only for the achievement.

its very addicting and tons of fun. I nabbed this game while it was on sale because it reminded me of an old flash game I used to play as a kid (I think it was called Bread Winner? I could be wrong though)
I used to really love playing that flash game, so when I saw lightfish and how similar it looked in gameplay, I figured I'd give it a try, and I really wasn't disappointed.

Light fish is basically a much more nicely designed/more aesthetically pleasing than the flash game ever was, but with the same basic gameplay mechanics (and a few new interesting ones at higher levels)

It's an absolutely gorgeous game, and is excellent for people who sometimes just want to play something a little more casual and relaxing. The purpose of the game is to section off jellyfish and other similar creatures into small blocks, destroying them and gaining points. The level ends when all creatures are gotten rid of, and you are scored on your efficiency and speed in finishing the level.

It's definitely worth grabbing (especially on sale), and is a nice little game to play between less casual games or if you're a bit on the tired side.

It's also fairly nostalgic for me in a weird kind of way, since it reminds me so much of the game I used to play online as a kid.. Qix with fish. Lightfish. It's Qix, but dressed up in fancy vector-looking graphics and set in a computerized looking aquatic environment. As such the game doesn't have the abstract power of the Qix presentation, but the mechanics are exactly the same and so you'll find the same sense of enjoyment as the venerable old arcade game. The new updates involve some different types of opponents which exhibit different behaviors (one will explode near you, another will seek you out when you draw your lines, and another just floats around getting in your way). There's also different elements that you traverse when drawing out your territory which can slow you down, block you, or kill you if you touch it which add to the variety of the task.

I like it, but it's a very slight game and not one you're likely to pick up and play a whole lot unless you just happen to be in the mood for Qix action. I thought the music was okay although it's very much Amiga old school mod music. I tend to like that sound.... I thought it was nice to come across this game, a nice classic style of game. It's a great little mini game for when you are bored and aren't looking to get into any games that big.

The graphics are pretty nice and although it isn't that long of a game, it's still a good time waster.
