WorkScape is an application purposely developed to constantly monitor the daily activity of an employee. The application has to be installed on the employee's computer in order to be able to gather data about their actions. It may be seen as a spying tool, but the app's logo will stay in the system tray, which lets the owner of that computer know about its existence. WorkScape requires an account in order to be functional, and the manager can connect to a cloud-based dashboard for accessing the gathered data. The application features include time tracking, activity tracking, location tracking (GPS), website monitoring, screenshot peaking, and application monitoring. The time tracking function covers most of the employee's time at work, meaning that from the time they arrive at work, the idle periods, the breaks, until the end of the day, are going to be visible from the dashboard. Regarding the activity tracker, the application displays the time the employee spends on their computer, in relation to the time they are away, so the manager can calculate the overall computer time. The same process applies to the website monitor, which lists all the sites an employee is accessing. In conclusion, WorkScape is a tracking tool oriented towards companies and businesses and engages in work/time-related data collection from the employee computers.
